Richard Whitten Barnes returns to St. Joe

With summer once again caressing our Island, the return to warm weather has also brought noted novelist Richard Whitten Barnes and his wife Marg back to their summer residence near Richards Landing. Although they officially live near Charlotte,

North Carolina, the Barnes' have spent their summers on or around St. Joseph Island for more than 50 years!

The Island Clippings featured Richard and his writing in our October 15, 2009 issue. At that time, his exciting first action-adventure novel 'The Faircloth Reaction' had just been published to rave reviews, with his second novel 'The Corydon Snow' about to follow. Both novels were written right here on St. Joe!

And it seems that Richard has been busy over the winter, with some exciting new work approaching completion. Rumour has it that the rich history of St. Joseph Island might provide some of the background for his next project! We'll hopefully hear more about this in the near future.

In the meantime, Richard has graciously shared one of his short stories, 'A Sailing Lesson' with the Island Clippings. Although we have not previously offered works of fiction to our readers, 'A Sailing Lesson' is a story worth sharing. Perhaps the lesson it offers goes far beyond sailing!

We're pleased to bring Part One to you in this issue. Part Two will follow next week.

'A Sailing Lesson' captures some of the essence of 'cottage life' here in the North. Although set on the southern shores of Lake Superior, the story could easily take place in the waters around St. Joe. We hope you like it as much as we did!

Thank you, Richard, for taking us all aboard the sailboat with Steve and Tommy!

A Sailing Lesson (Part 1)

by Richard Whitten Barnes

"TOMMY! I'VE CALLED YOU THREE TIMES, now!" his mother—my daughter-in-law—admonished for the fourth time, actually. "I'm just finishing this game," his answer.

Sarah, my wife of forty-three years, reached over to put a hand on my tensing hand, disabusing me of any attempt at physically bouncing this fourteen-year-old's rear end from the sofa to the dinner table, where the rest of us waited. It wasn't the first tense moment in the week since Kate and her two children—Tommy and younger sister, Martha—arrived at our summer cottage on the southern shore of Lake Superior.

Looking back, I suppose a lot of the tension was due to my disappointment in, once again, my son Tom's absence from the summer's activities. Our times together at our northern Michigan get-away were special. I was never so close to him as when we were there. We communicated on a different level there. And we sailed!

For the third year in a row, Tom was missing the summer. Two years earlier, he'd lost his job at a major bank, when it was absorbed by a larger one. He'd spent the first summer looking for another job, then last year and this, getting his fledgling accounting firm solvent enough to support his family.

I watched my grandson now, the image of his father, as he took his seat and stared at his potatoes. "Can't we have mashed? I don't like fried," he pouted. "Just eat your dinner," his mother said in her serene alto. I had the urge to grab him by the ear and march him to his room.

Never mind that at his young age, he was almost my weight and strength. Sarah's sharp glance dissuaded me. Dinner was completed in relative peace, Tommy's sister leading the conversation in a recap of her day with the kids down the shore.

After the dishes were put away, I stepped past Tommy—again engrossed with his hand-held game—to the deck. The weather had been wonderful all summer and tonight, the lake below me was like glass. My thirty-five-year-old Snipe sailboat swung slowly around its mooring like a patient pony, nodding now and then at the wake of someone's distant boat.

I'd bought her new, the year before I competed in the Snipe nationals, coming in a respectable fifth overall, with son Tom as crew, and was still in love with the feisty little boat. The cottage was built in the late 1930s, and purchased by my parents shortly after WWII. Growing up, there was hardly a year that we didn't spend our vacation there, and I learned to sail on dad's venerable Lightning. Then, when Sarah and I married, I was delighted when she, too, fell in love with our annual trek up north.

Sarah was a willing crew and we competed in loosely organized racing on Superior's south shore. But when our young son Tom first got in a sailboat, I knew he was a natural. He was six when I bought the Snipe, and by then, already sailing his own pram. This year, I'd been sailing just a few times. The Snipe is a two man boat, and not safe to handle alone in anything but benign weather, at least for the older gentleman I've become. Lake Superior is rarely benign.

It just wasn't the same without Tom here. I stood on the deck, taking in the beauty of the lake for several minutes before returning inside to find Sarah, Kate, and Martha deeply engaged in a jigsaw puzzle; Tommy still at his game, thumbs working in rapid, practiced coordination. "That your exercise for the next two weeks?" I was immediately sorry I'd said it. Sarcasm with kids rarely has a positive outcome, I'd learned the hard way.

"I guess." was his predictable reply. He didn't look up. His game emitted an infuriating, inane melody. I tried a different approach. "What are your plans for tomorrow?" "Nothing, really."

“Well it’s your vacation. I suppose you can do what you want.” That ought to get him. “Okay.”

I retired to my chair and picked up my book, but it was no use. Over the top of the book, I glared at my grandson who, oblivious to my frustration, thumbed away at his game. “Tommy!” I waited until he looked up. He didn’t. “Yeah?” still engaged in the game. “How is it that you never learned to sail?” I asked.

The question requiring more than a one or two word answer caused him to stop, and consider. “I don’t know.” Three words. Kate said from the puzzle table “We were never able to spend enough time here, dad.” Kate calls me dad. I liked it because I like Kate. “Leave the boy alone, Steve.” Sarah, this time. “I’m just asking,” I gruffed. “Tommy, it’s time you learned.” He shrugged.

“It would be nice if you let grandpa teach you, Tom,” his mother chided. I’m pretty sure that translated as humor the old guy. Tommy rolled his eyes at her. “I guess.” I was not deterred. I’d show this kid a thing or two. I grabbed a pencil and pad from my chair side table, plopped down on the sofa next to him and began scribbling. “Okay, the first thing is to learn is nomenclature, then the points of sailing, then...”

And so it went, with me showing off how much I knew to this fourteen year-old, all the while pontificating on the virtue and purity of sail over power. It went on for too long. Finally, Sarah put a stop to it. “That’s enough! For Pete’s sake, save it for tomorrow. Now, who’s ready for dessert?”

The next morning was a clone of the day before, except for the warm south breeze that rippled the lake just beyond the moored boats along the shore. We’d finished a late breakfast. “What do you say, Tommy? Want to put your newly found knowledge to work and sail that little beauty down there?” He looked out at the waiting Snipe. “Guess so.” Never one to waste words, that boy.

By 11:30 a.m., it was already a hot day. We trudged down to our dock and rowed the john boat out to the Snipe. Often, on a hot day like this I would sail with my life jacket off, but within reach. Today, as an example to my student, I made sure we were both wearing them. We tumbled into the sailboat. Immediately, I began pointing out various items on the boat, quizzing the boy for their proper names. He didn’t do well. Last night went in one ear and ... well, okay, I thought, he’ll remember better out here.

We got the jib and mainsail up, and the rudder shipped. “Alright, Tommy, I want you to crawl forward and unclip the painter from the buoy.” He complied. “This rope?” I heaved a sigh. “It’s a line. Boats have lines, not ropes. Remember?” “I guess,” he mumbled, and we were under way.

We ran before a soft southern breeze that quickly freshened as we cleared the wind line of the shore. Soon, our wake was bubbling joyfully. I let Tommy take the tiller right away to get the feel of things, again going over parts of the boat—boom vang, downhaul, dagger board settings, fairlead positions. It was rewarding to see a bit of enthusiasm in the boy's face as he worked the helm. If he wasn't absorbing my lectures, he seemed to be having fun.

"We're really far out, grandpa." He was right. I'd been going on so long, I hadn't noticed how the wind had picked up and driven us well north on our broad reach. "Better let me take the tiller, now. We can practice tacking into the wind on our way back." We traded places as I handed him the jib sheets to work.

Events started going downhill from there. Tommy had been fine, as long as he was steering the boat. Once I demoted him to crew, and began issuing orders, his brain stopped working. "Drop the board a bit," I said. "The what?" He looked left and right. "The dagger board—right in front of you!"

He fumbled with it, despite our having practiced earlier. "Okay, now, ready about!" I waited. "I said, ready about!" Nothing. "Are you ready?" "Yeah!" "Then say so!" I groused. "I'm ready!" Sarcasm dripping off the word.

I pushed the tiller over. "Helm's alee!" He wasn't ready. The Snipe's boom, though mounted higher than most small boats, came over hard, clipping him smartly on the noggin. "Ow!" He gave me an accusing look.

"Sheet in!" I ordered. The jib was flapping gaily. He was still rubbing his head. Finally he pulled, but on the wrong sheet. "Which rope?" he asked. "No ropes, remember?" I instructed. "The leeward one."

Now he was really confused. "That one!" I pointed, not helping his self-confidence a bit. The boat settled down to a nice port tack. I decided, that since practice makes perfect, to tack again. It was a near mirror image of the last fiasco. The more we sailed, the more Tommy's brain refused to function—for, aft, windward, leeward, port, starboard, boom vang, hiking strap—up, down!

"Let's call it a day," I called, after seeing diminishing returns had set in. Tommy glumly stared at the distant shore. The wind had picked up, veering to the southwest. I noticed the sky darkening in the west, as well as significantly larger seas. I decided to stay on our starboard tack, even though I knew we'd have to tack again to get home. It was a serious mistake. The closer we got to shore, the higher the swells.

Finally the time to put the boat over to port had come. I wished we'd done it sooner. "Ready about!" I yelled over the wind. Tommy looked at the lines in his hands. "Okay, I guess!" "Helm's alee!" He ducked as the boom went over. He scrambled to the high side and set the jib. A huge wave hit us on the port side, throwing green water over the gunnel.

"Good work!" He didn't respond, as he dealt with the icy cold of Lake Superior water. Now the wind was really starting to blow. We were hiked out, fighting to keep the boat upright, while water sloshed in the boat's floorboards.

We stayed on that tack for several minutes, but the wind was reaching gale strength. The waves were making it almost impossible to gain any westward progress. I decided to tack once more to the south, and beach the boat somewhere down wind of our cottage.

"One more time, Tommy!" I yelled. "Ready about?" "Ready!" I could barely hear him over the wind and spray hitting the sails. I threw the tiller down hard, just as a wave punched our bow, drenching us again, and preventing the tack. I tried again. This time the boat came around, but another wave hit us on the starboard side.

Before I knew it I was in the water. I surfaced, frantic, and looking for the boat and my grandson! There! I saw the boat, somehow still upright, galloping away downwind—out to sea! It was soon out of sight.

Continued next week

Two people are out sailing when suddenly a hand appears in the sea.

"What's that?" asked the skipper,

"It looks as if someone is drowning!"

"No," explained his crew, "It's just a little wave."

Island Insight

THIS WEEK, WITHIN A 24 HOUR PERIOD, eight people were involved in two collisions where seatbelts or the lack of seat belt use, played a pivotal role in the outcome. My condolences go out to family and friends who are suffering the aftermath. Personally, I am truly shaken by these circumstances knowing that seat belts would have made a difference.

On May 31 at 11:30 pm on Highway 11, Temagami, a 15 year old girl, not wearing her seatbelt, was ejected from the van she was in and died on the roadway, her 16th birthday mere minutes away. The driver of the van crossed the center line and collided with a transport truck and died as a result. The other passengers, also not wearing their seatbelts, a 13 and an 18 year old, suffered serious injuries. Fortunately, the driver of the transport was wearing his seat belt and was not physically injured. He did everything he could to avoid the oncoming van, but the crash was inevitable.

On June 01, at 3:30 pm on Highway 17, Thessalon, an 18 year old driver attempted to pass a transport truck on the right, lost control and rolled the vehicle. One of his two passengers, a 65 year old who was unbelted, was ejected from the back seat. Both passengers in the vehicle were seriously injured.

In less than a day, two people are dead and five others are in hospital with serious, life-altering injuries. A tragic and heartbreaking reality.

As of June 1, Ontario Provincial Police North East Regional 2010 totals are 16 fatal collisions and 21 people dead. This time last year, we had 9 fatal collisions and 10 people dead. So far this year in the North East Region, there have been 248 personal injury collisions and 1,565 property damage collisions. Last year at this time, 336 and 1,964 respectively.

The Ontario Provincial Police will continue to maintain its high visibility and focus on impaired driving, aggressive driving and seat belt compliance. We will be driving that message home through the assistance of local media, public education and joint enforcement operations with our partners. Each and every police officer is determined to make a difference.

Some people say that a $240.00 ticket is a steep fine for not wearing a seatbelt, but having a young person die instead of blowing out a birthday candle is a much steeper price to pay.

Please, wear your seat belts and make sure your children are safely buckled in.

Jayne Pateman Injured in Car Crash

ISLAND RESIDENTS ARE SADDENED and concerned for the Pateman family of Richards Landing, following a serious 3 vehicle collision in Laird Township last week.

Well-known former Central School Principal Jayne Pateman was seriously injured when her distinctive yellow Chevrolet Cavalier was struck by an eastbound SUV on Highway 17 at the Bar River Road intersection, near Echo Bay. The SUV, unable to stop in time, then collided with another eastbound vehicle. All three vehicles were reportedly demolished.

Jayne remains in Sault Area Hospital with serious injuries, with husband Bill constantly at her side. The OPP are continuing with their investigation of the accident.

The Island Clippings wishes Jayne a speedy and full recovery. We're sure that the Pateman family will be in the thoughts and prayers of the entire community.

Restricted Fire Zone Update

Effective June 4th, the Ministry of Natural Resources has lifted the Restricted Fire Zone across much of Northeastern Ontario. It remains in place however, for the areas south of Wawa, including the districts of Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury and North Bay.

The area remaining under restriction is bounded by Lake Huron and the French and Mattawa Rivers in the south, the Quebec border in the east, from Latchford to the Montreal River in the north, and the Lake Superior shoreline on the west.

The Restricted Fire Zone covering our area will therefore remain in effect until further notice.

Re-creating a Future for the Norman family

ON APRIL 16, 2010, Christine (Payne) Norman and her three beautiful sons, Cole (6), Trent (4) and Reed (2), lost their husband, friend and father, Tom Norman, in a tragic accident while vacationing in Aruba. Due to his job, he had no life insurance.

Norman's Mom's (Mothers on a Mission), a group of friends of the family, are planning a Pasta Dinner & Silent Auction at the Moose Lodge on Monday, June 21st from 5 – 8 pm, to raise funds to help Christine keep a roof over her family's heads, and to help her "Re-create the Future" for herself and her sons.

We hope to make it possible for the children to stay in their own home, until Christine is out of hospital and able to make the important decisions that she will need to make regarding their future.

Tickets are $20, and are available at:

Moose Lodge - 543 Trunk Road; Bath Solutions - 655 Second Line West; or by contacting Mark at 542-9178 or mark@nationalteleconnect.com

Silent Auction items can be donated by calling Mark at 542-9178

Donations can be made directly to the family at any Northern Credit Union to "The Norman Family Trust Account".

For more information on the Norman Family please feel free to contact Christine's brother, Kalin Payne at 613-218-2380 or via email at kalinpayne@hotmail.com.

The Norman Family and Friends thank you for your support!

PC DOCTOR

by George Skardis

QUESTION: My 5-year-old computer is running slower and slower. It hesitates frequently and on occasion locks up completely. This has been an excellent computer until now. It has never needed any service. Any idea what is wrong?

ANSWER: Your 5-year-old computer is telling you that it needs some attention. Ignore these early warning signs and risk losing everything that you have stored on this computer. The most likely cause for your current symptoms is an ailing hard-drive which should be replaced sooner rather than later.

I have seen home and business computer owners struggle through hoping that whatever is plaguing that darn computer will clear itself up. Instead, the worst thing imaginable happens. Your digital family pictures are lost. Computerized business records are lost. Be grateful when there are warning signs. Not all computer hard drives nearing the end-of-life behave alike. Instead of slowing down gradually, hesitating, and locking up, a hard drive can stop spinning completely. Gone forever.

A hard-drive consists of metal platters. Newer hard-drives use glass or glass-ceramic platters which do not expand and contract with temperature changes. The platters are coated with a thin layer of magnetic material which deteriorates over time. Read-write heads move above the platters but are not in contact with the platters. While the metal platters are spinning, a thin cushion of air builds up between head and platter surface. Accidentally bump your computer with sufficient force and the head might strike the platter. This momentary contact can result in damage and lost data. The platters and read-write head are sealed inside an aluminum box to prevent dust contamination.

During operation, the hard-drive can be quite noisy. The platters rotate at 5400 rpm or 7200 rpm and produce a humming sound. The read-write heads are activated by computer instructions to move from position to position, rattling, clicking, and crunching away to themselves. Very loud, isolated clicks can be a sign of trouble.

Hard-drives can store an incredible amount of data today. The smallest drives have 160 gb (gigabyte) capacity. Check your personal computer to determine the storage capacity of your current hard-drive. Go to My Computer. Right click on Local Disk (C:). Click on Properties to view details with a pie chart displaying total space, used space and remaining free space. Manufacturers have stopped production for the smaller 40 gb or 80 gb hard-drives found in older computers. Does your computer shelter an antique hard-drive?

Replace your faulty hard-drive with a factory fresh unit. Replacement hard-drives are available with prices ranging from $50 and up depending on the source, brand, and capacity.

*A St. Joseph Island
Museum Moment*

Hey I'm back. Did you miss me? Ha! Ha! The museum weathered the winter well and is looking spiffy again. The bunnies are hopping, the birds are nesting, the deer are checking us out but so far no groundhogs.

The Log House has a whole new look, thanks to some new artifacts and a lot of expert help from Bert and Rhonna. The medical display in the Church is much larger and more interesting and last but not least the new display in the barn will be of much interest. A year ago Margaret Snider called to see if we would accept Jim's models of farm machinery, and we were delighted to accept them.

Jim had two new tables made and their friend Tom Orr delivered them last year. Well a week ago Graham and Norma Schell arrived with all six of Jim's models under Plexiglas and what an addition to our museum!

Jim and Margaret both grew up on a farm, Jim in Woodbridge and Margaret was a White from Bruce Mines. Jim worked in excavation for many years and Margaret taught school first in Tarentorus and then in Sault Ste. Marie. They moved to St. Joe 27 years ago and were actively involved in many volunteer organizations. They recently moved back to the Sault and are sorely missed by this community. Jim's love of woodworking started 60 years ago and has continued to this day. He is planning to make some sheaths of wheat for our display and I can't wait to see them.

We open on June 19th, six days a week. 9:30 to 4:30 daily, closed Tuesdays. Come see all the new displays.

Don't forget! The first 10 people who come to the museum to get or renew their membership get a free prize, and 5 are already gone. The prizes for members only are looking pretty awesome this year. I haven't firmed them up yet but as soon as I get confirmation I will list them for you. For $20.00 single or $30.00 family you get a season's pass to the museum, a newsletter in the spring, a chance to win one of 5 great prizes for members only, and of course the good feeling you get for helping us to preserve these 6000 artifacts.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE News

The Clover Valley and Richards Landing Women's Institute members enjoyed their outing on Tuesday, June 1st. The first stop was Mom's restaurant for lunch and then on to the St. Joseph Island Museum for a personal tour by Curator Pat Fleming. I encourage everyone to renew their museum membership and visit the museum during the season to support this outstanding island asset. Pat, staff and volunteers are planning several events and are continually changing and improving the museum displays. We had an amazing visit and sent our thanks for all the hard work they do on site.

In July, the Clover Valley and Richards Landing Institutes will join forces to host two events. The first is the Algoma North Shore District Women's Institute International Picnic on Wednesday, July 21st, where members and guests will enjoy lunch and participate in a tour of the island by bus or boat.

The second event is the Women's Institute Quilt Show on July 30, 31 and August 1st. The Quilt Show is the fundraising event for both Institutes. Funds raised during the show allow us to make donations to the island's local fire departments, the Children's Library, St. Joseph Island Central School programs and the local Food Bank, to name only a few of the organizations supported.

We are always looking for volunteers for the Quilt Show so if you want to help out with set up, take down, the Tea Room, or greeting guests and taking their money, please contact Carol Smith at 246-3942. You can volunteer for as little as 3 hours. We are also looking for quilts to display at the show!
